

Paris, June 2026

Dear Hiring Team,

When I read Tomorro's job posting, one line stood out: "your goal will be to recruit and coach a CSM team, and to guarantee the best possible client experience." That is a brief I have been executing, in different forms, for the past 20 years.

At EVA, I created the CSM department from scratch across a network of 70+ accounts. I designed the KPI frameworks, the playbooks, the review rhythms and the individual coaching processes. The result: +190% network revenue growth in 2 years. I've spent 20 years making people around me better. A team of 5 to 6 is exactly where I thrive.

Customer success and client management have been a constant throughout my career, not just at EVA. From managing sponsors at Games Services, to key clients at Oxent, to brand and publisher relationships at Webedia, to connecting professional players with top partners at Prodigy, I have always had clients to develop and relationships to grow.

What draws me to Tomorro specifically is twofold. First, the mission: throughout my career I have been on the client side of contracts, negotiating brand deals, franchise agreements, partnership contracts. I know firsthand what friction in contract management costs in time and stress. Tomorro is solving a problem I have lived. Second, the culture: I use Claude every day, I built my candidature page on GitHub, I automate, I prompt. ThursdAI is not a foreign concept, it is how I already work.

I have prepared a dedicated application page you can explore here: brochet.gg/tomorro

I am based in the Paris area, available immediately, and happy to discuss at your convenience.

Yours sincerely,

Julien Brochet
