

Paris, June 2026

Dear Hiring Team,

When I read the Rise Up job posting, one line stopped me: "You are the architect of the processes, the guarantor of retention and the engine of expansion." That is exactly the type of role I have been building toward, and that I actually built at EVA over the past three years.

At EVA, I created the Customer Success and Account Management function from scratch across a network of 70+ accounts. I designed the KPI frameworks, the account playbooks, the review rhythms and the upsell processes. The result: +190% network revenue growth in 2 years. Before that, at Prodigy Agency, I restructured the commercial function and supported growth from 10 to 30 employees in under 12 months.

Beyond EVA, account and partner management has been a constant throughout my career. Whether managing sponsors at Games Services, key clients at Oxent, brand and publisher partners at Webedia, or agency relationships at Prodigy, I have always had a portfolio to develop and relationships to grow.

The Rise Up role resonates for a specific reason beyond the role itself. Arnaud Blachon says it clearly: most companies react when skill gaps appear. I have always thought that was too late. In every team I built, the first question was not how to hit the targets it was how to make each person better. At EVA, every account review started with a development conversation before a performance one. Rise Up is building the infrastructure for that conviction to scale at every company. That is a product I would be proud to represent.

I have also prepared a dedicated application page you can explore here: brochet.gg/riseup

I am based in the Paris area, available immediately, and happy to discuss at your convenience.

Yours sincerely,

Julien Brochet
